Connecting agents and buyers in SW Washington

Open House Weekend in Clark County!

Like baseball and tulips, the Open House Weekend has become a spring tradition in Clark County!

The 9th annual Washington Association of Realtors Open House Weekend is a great opportunity for home buyers and sellers to visit many of the homes for sale throughout Clark County. On behalf of the Clark County Association of Realtors, I would like to personally invite you to this 2-day event on April 21-22, where homes will be open to the public. Open houses are a great way to view available homes. Buyers can look at a house online but nothing replaces the excitement of actually driving through a neighborhood and walking a home's floor plan. People get to experience a house to see if it is a good fit for their needs and it is a wonderful, pressure-free way to spend time looking at homes on a spring weekend. Statistically, about half of all homebuyers attend open houses as part of their home buying process.

Whether you are searching for your new home or selling the one you have, this is an event you will not want to miss. With an improving housing market, buyers are ready to emerge from the sidelines to look for their next home.

Information about location and times for the many open houses can be found at www.Columbian.com/OpenHouse. Look for the signs and blue balloons with the trademark Realtor "R" as you are driving around. A Realtor will be on hand at every home to offer you information about the area and the home buying process. A real estate transaction can be complicated, but a Realtor understands the complexity and makes it a seamless and exciting process for you to enjoy your new home.

The Open House

By MATT ELERDING

Yes, they are staged. Yes, they look like something out of a Norman Rockwell painting. Yes, the smell of chocolate chip cookies that wafts through the air tantalizing your olfactory nerve with savory images of your grandmother's house when you were just a child is executed with the utmost intent.

It is, after all, an Open House.

Setting aside for a moment the ham-fisted efforts of the well-intentioned real estate agent to create the ideal home ("cue the deer!"), there are some valuable reasons to attend (or to host) an Open House when you're in the market to buy (or to sell) a home.

First and foremost, viewing an Open House gives you the opportunity to see a piece of real estate as a home as opposed to merely a house. The ability to visualize a house as a home can be challenging when you are looking at nothing more than an empty shell of brick and mortar. Touring a home that has been properly staged with furniture, decorations (and, yes, the intoxicating smell of freshly baked cookies) allows a would-be buyer to fully appreciate the look and feel of a 'finished product'.

Although a buyer's agent is an invaluable resource in assisting buyers in fine-tuning their 'needs and wants' list, attending an open house (along with your agent) offers the opportunity to talk with the agent who represents that specific home. The listing agent will often times have insight on the history of the home, the pros and cons of the neighborhood and other nuances about the specific property that other industry professionals may not be privy to.

It has been my experience that many potential buyers believe they have a firm idea of the amenities they are looking for in a new home: bedroom count, big backyard, close freeway access, granite countertops, 'master on the main', bonus room, etc. That said, it's hard to know what specifics you want if you don't even know they exist. Touring an Open House – even if it is not exactly the home you're looking for (location, bedroom count, school district, etc) – can introduce you to new ideas, concepts and other advancements that you may want to incorporate as part of your search.

Lastly, if the Open House is in your neighborhood and happens to be your next door neighbor, it will give you a chance to (legally) tour their home when they're not there and finally put to rest whether or not they still have those hedge clippers that I know I loaned him last summer but he claims he returned them to me. Hmpff.

Happy House Hunting!
